

THE NEW PLAYS

"General Post"
Cheerfully Patriotic

BY CHARLES DARNTON.

It is a long way across the water, but we're getting there with our transports, so there's no reason to worry about "General Post," exhibited at the Gaiety Theatre.

The play that takes its name from a game is cheerfully patriotic. In other words, it goes through with the thing and comes out with a smile. No doubt J. E. Harold had this pleasant notion in his mind when he began to write this war satire. It is a play that leaves everything to the future.

Forecasts, especially if they come from Berlin, must be taken with more than a grain of salt, not to mention sugar. "General Post," on the other hand, is quite simple. It takes the name as well as the game, and shows how both low and lofty persons change places in war time. That's the whole business and I must confess that it moves rather slowly.

There is so little action that you think of Arnold Bennett and the provincial touch suggestive of England. Thank heaven, we still have good actors on our soil. Thomas A. Wise is the main pillar of "General Post," and this is said without an attempt at a pun. Mr. Wise is the country squire rather than the baronet in the proceedings, and accordingly, he gives the character a homesy, simple humor that is irrefragable. Mr. Wise and William Courtenay are still "pals."

"THE GRAND PASSION" PORTRAYS CUPID WITH A DEADLY AUTOMATIC

Cupid armed with an automatic would best symbolize the heart interest in "The Grand Passion," the feature picture starring Dorothy Phillips at the Broadway Theatre. Everybody in the cast seems to have an automatic, fully loaded, somewhere about his person, and several of the principals tote a couple of wicked "guns," for in this screen play based on Thomas Addison's story, "The Boas of Powdermill," there is action from start to finish—and the finish of a lot of the characters is decidedly violent. In addition to the beautiful star other favorites are William Stowell as the Boas and Jack Mulhall as the handsome Park Row reporter, who is as handy with a pistol as he is with a typewriter. Besides "the Grand Passion" the bill at the Broadway includes a comedy introducing "a male vampire," the Universal Weekly, with a fine collection of pictures of news events, and the Universal Magazine, which among other things, has a worth while series showing how to make friends with wild birds. The Broadway Theatre orchestra presents an interesting programme.

and their spring leaves nothing to be desired in the way of good fellow-ship. If Mr. Wise appears at his best in a uniform, Mr. Courtenay will be a good friend as a soldier, and finally with the girl who had "faded" him when he was a mere tailor.

Shoolery is done to death, and if it were not for the fact that Mr. Wise plays down to the country squire with the war-souled humor of which he is capable, the play might be lost to American audiences.

Mr. Courtenay is quite on his mettle as the tailor who rises to the height of a Brigadier General, giving a performance that has both sturdiness and distinction. Olive Tell, as Betty, plays her part according to Bernard Shaw. Cynthia Brooks brings distinction to her role, and it is only natural that she should finish when Col. Smith says: "You may rest assured, Lady Brumstone, that I shall not presume upon my position." Can you imagine any Colonel saying that sort of thing to any lady? Heaven help the provincial mind!

English to the backbone, "General Post" is mildly amusing.
